

I'm concerned about Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to pre-empt their regular programming to air a one-sided show attacking a presidential candidate. Their showing a program that attacks one candidate, without balancing it with material from the other side, creates the appearance that they are using the public airwaves to serve one political party rather than the public's interest in getting both sides of the story. This is especially disturbing given that earlier this year they forbade their stations to air a Nightline program honoring the soldiers who died in Iraq, possibly out of concern that discussing the costs of the war would embarrass the current president.

Sinclair is not serving the public in how it uses the public airwaves.
